Undertaking collaborative research with your participants – hit or myth?

My paper will explore some of the key issues in collaborative and co-produced research.

My PhD research focus – cyberbullying; my methods – narratives; and my participants, drawn as they are from a vulnerable group, invite the possibility, even suggest a necessity for collaboration and co-production.

But, equally, the focus, methods and participants raise questions, not least ethical ones.

I may be interested in collaboration, but is it in my participants interests?
